Competition and the Crunch 25 February 2009

Our spring event, hosted by Glasgow University Law School, will consider the impact of the credit crunch on varied aspects of competition - from state aids to energy consumers.

The evening will be co-chaired by Professors Mark Furse and Rosa Greaves. Some of you will have heard Professor Rosa Greaves introduce the discussion of the role of competition in a recession and open up the questions about changing priorities. Now we can look in more detail at some of the specific impacts with presentations including:

Mercedes Campo Mozo from DG Competition on the new temporary state aid framework adopted to face the current financial crisis

Steve Smith from Ofgem on steps it is taking to ensure that our competitive energy markets continue to work well for energy consumers in current conditions

We may have further panel members to contribute to the discussion, and as always there will be open debate, followed by informal networking and a glass of wine.

Consumer Focus Scotland are kindly sponsoring the event.
